Marty specializes in defending product designers, manufacturers, and sellers against serious personal injury claims arising out of alleged product defects. He has defended automotive and truck manufacturers and part suppliers, including most of the major tire manufacturers, bicycle and motorcycle manufacturers, agricultural and construction equipment manufacturers, and manufacturers of a variety of industrial and consumer products.

Complementing his product liability specialty, Marty has represented both product manufacturers and premises owners in the ever evolving toxic tort and asbestos litigation in Virginia and throughout the country. He serves as national trial and discovery counsel for a multi-national heavy equipment manufacturer, and further represents product manufacturers and sellers in the automotive parts and friction industries, as well as other industrial product manufacturers.

In addition to successfully defending clients in Virginia, Marty is licensed in Maryland. Moreover, he has represented corporate defendants in both state and federal courts throughout the country, having appeared in over half of the states from coast to coast.

Marty is an AV-rated litigator who frequently has been recognized for his accomplishments and integrity by his peers and clients. Outside of his law practice, Marty served on the board of Richmond Little League from 2011 to 2025, and as president of the board from 2017 to 2019. During his presidency, Richmond Little League expanded to offer girls' softball and brought three new fields on line for the kids. Marty previously was a board member at Willow Oaks Country Club and served six years as its membership chairman. Marty served as president of the board of independent radio station WNRN, during which time the station expanded from a regional to a statewide organization.
