Complex Litigation
Medical Malpractice

Kimberly “Kim” Taylor is a paralegal on the firm’s Complex Litigation team, where she supports attorneys managing medical malpractice matters and other general litigation. She is recognized for her careful diligence, strong organization, and steady follow-through. All these skills help keep cases moving efficiently from intake through trial preparation. Kim takes pride in producing polished work product, maintaining clear and accurate files, and providing responsive, client-focused support.

Her litigation background before joining MRC includes experience on the plaintiff side, as well as work with insurance defense firms and personal injury firms. That range of exposure gives her a practical understanding of case development from multiple perspectives and supports her ability to anticipate next steps, manage deadlines, and help attorneys stay prepared for each phase of litigation.

Outside of the office, Kim enjoys spending time with her family and has a particular interest in all things Disney. She brings that same upbeat energy to her work, making her a dependable, approachable colleague and a dedicated support for the litigation team.
